INTRODUCTION

Paraprofessionals play an indispensable role in the modern classroom. Whether they are supporting students with special needs, assisting English language learners, or helping a lead teacher manage daily operations, these education professionals are a vital part of any school's success. But when it comes time for performance reviews, administrators and lead teachers often struggle to find the right words. Writing meaningful evaluations can feel daunting, especially when you want to be both honest and encouraging.

This is where Paraprofessional Evaluation Comment Examples come into play. Having a bank of ready-to-use, thoughtful comments can save time and ensure that your feedback is fair, specific, and actionable. This article provides a comprehensive set of examples across evaluation of performance, along with tips on how to tailor them to individual situations. Whether you are a principal, a special education coordinator, or a classroom teacher tasked with evaluating a paraprofessional, you will find everything you need to craft evaluations that are both professional and supportive.

We will cover everything from classroom support and student engagement to professionalism and areas for growth. By the end of this guide, you will not only have a rich collection of examples but also a clear framework for writing your own comments. Let's dive in.

COMMENTS MATTER FOR PARAPROFESSION ALS

Paraprofessional evaluations are more than just a checkbox on a to-do list. They serve multiple purposes that are crucial for both the individual and the school community. First, evaluations provide recognition and motivation. Paraprofessionals often work behind the scenes, and a well-written comment can make them feel seen and appreciated. Second, evaluations identify areas for professional growth. Constructive feedback helps paraprofessionals improve their skills, which directly benefits the students they serve. Third, evaluations create a formal record of performance that can be used for promotions, salary increases, or continued employment decisions.

When you use specific paraprofessional evaluation comment examples, you move beyond vague praise like "does a good job" or "needs improvement." Instead, you provide concrete evidence of strengths and weaknesses. For example, saying "You consistently use positive reinforcement strategies to de-escalate challenging behaviors" is far more helpful than simply saying "You are good with students." Specific comments also make the evaluation process more transparent and fair, reducing the likelihood of misunderstandings or disputes.

KEY AREAS TO EVALUATE IN A PARAPROFESSIONAL ROLE

Before we jump into the examples, it helps to understand the core competencies that are typically evaluated in a paraprofessional role. While every school district may have its own rubric, most evaluations cover the following key areas:

- Classroom Support and Instruction:
How well the paraprofessional assists with lessons, activities, and instructional materials.
- Student Engagement

and

Relationship

Building: The ability to connect with students, foster trust, and keep them engaged in learning.

- Communication with Teachers and Staff:

How effectively the paraprofessional shares observations, asks for guidance, and collaborates with the team.

- Professionalism and

Reliability:

Attendance, punctuality, attitude, and adherence to school policies.

- Adaptability and Problem-

Solving: The capacity to adjust to changing situations, handle unexpected challenges, and think on their feet.

- Student

Behavior

Management:

Techniques used to support positive behavior and address disruptions.

Each of these areas requires a unique kind of feedback. The following sections provide

1. Classroom Support and Instruction

Positive Examples:

- “You consistently arrive prepared with all necessary materials and are proactive in setting up the classroom before instruction begins. This level of organization contributes significantly to the smooth flow of our daily lessons.”

- “Your ability to work with small groups is outstanding. You follow the teacher’s lesson plans closely while also adapting your explanations to meet the varied learning needs of individual students.”
- “You have a strong command of the instructional techniques used in our reading intervention program. Your one-on-one support has helped several students make measurable progress in their literacy skills.”

Constructive Feedback Examples:

- “While you are excellent at following directions, I would like to see you take more initiative in suggesting modifications to activities when you notice a student is struggling. Please feel free to share your observations during our planning meetings.”
- “Sometimes the pace of your instruction with small groups is a bit fast. Slowing down and checking for understanding more frequently would help ensure that all students are keeping up with the material.”

- “I encourage you to keep a running record of the specific strategies you use during instructional support. This will help us better track student progress and identify what is working best.”

2. Student Engagem

Building

Positive Examples:

- “You have a warm and approachable demeanor that puts students at ease. I have noticed that even the most reluctant learners in our class respond positively to your encouragement.”
- “You make a consistent effort to learn about each student’s interests and background. This personal connection has been instrumental in building rapport and trust, especially with our new students.”

- “Your use of positive reinforcement and specific praise is excellent. Students know exactly what they are doing well, and this has created a more focused and supportive classroom environment.”

Constructive Feedback Examples:

- “I appreciate your patience with all students, but I have noticed that you sometimes disengage with a student when they exhibit challenging behavior. Staying present and using a calm, neutral tone during those moments will help de-escalate situations more effectively.”

- “Building relationships with our more reserved students may require a different approach. Consider using low-pressure, side-by-side interactions—such as working on an art project together—to gradually open lines of communication.”
- “Your interactions with students are generally positive, but I encourage you to focus more on asking open-ended questions that encourage critical thinking rather than just giving directions.”

3.

Communication with Teachers and Staff

Positive Examples:

- “You communicate openly and frequently with the lead teacher about student progress and any concerns that arise. This collaborative approach ensures that we are always on the same page.”

- “Your written notes to the teacher are clear and concise, and you always include relevant observations about student behavior and comprehension. This documentation is extremely valuable.”
- “You are an active listener during team meetings and ask thoughtful questions that show you are fully engaged in the educational plan for each student.”

Constructive Feedback Examples:

- “While you communicate well with the lead teacher, I encourage you to also share more of your own ideas and suggestions during staff meetings. Your perspective from direct student interaction is very important.”
- “Sometimes important details about a student’s day are shared informally at the end of the day. Documenting these observations in a quick email or shared log would help ensure nothing is missed.”

- “When you have a question about an assignment or a student’s plan, please reach out sooner rather than waiting. Timely communication helps us address issues before they become larger problems.”

4. Professionalism and Reliability

Positive Examples:

- “Your attendance and punctuality are exemplary. You have not missed a single day this semester and always arrive at least ten minutes early to prepare.”

- “You maintain a professional demeanor at all times, even in stressful situations. Your calm presence sets a positive example for both students and colleagues.”
- “You consistently follow school policies regarding confidentiality, dress code, and professional boundaries. I trust you completely with sensitive student information.”

Constructive Feedback Examples:

- “I have noticed a few instances of arriving just as the bell rings. While this is not a major issue, arriving a few minutes earlier would allow you to settle in and be fully ready for the start of instruction.”
- “Please be mindful of using your personal phone during student work time. Even if it is for a quick check, it can be distracting and sets a poor example for students.”
- “I appreciate your enthusiasm, but please ensure that all conversations with colleagues remain professional and focused on students. Personal topics are best saved for break times away from the classroom.”

5. Adaptability and Problem- Solving

Positive Examples:

- “You are incredibly flexible when our daily schedule changes unexpectedly.

Whether it is covering for a colleague or switching to a new activity, you adjust with a positive attitude.”

- “When a student became distressed during a transition, you quickly improvised a calming activity that helped them regulate. Your quick thinking prevented the situation from escalating.”
- “You are always open to trying new strategies suggested by the teacher or instructional coach. Your willingness to learn and adapt is one of your greatest strengths.”

Constructive Feedback Examples:

- “When faced with an unexpected problem, you sometimes wait for instructions rather than offering a potential solution. I encourage you to take more initiative and propose a plan when you see an issue.”
- “Change can be challenging for all of us, but I have noticed that new routines sometimes cause you visible frustration. Working on maintaining a calm, solution-focused mindset during transitions will be helpful.”

- “Please practice using the new assistive technology tools we have adopted. The more comfortable you become with them, the easier it will be to support students when technical issues arise.”

behavior management strategies effectively. Your use of nonverbal cues and proximity control often prevents disruptions before they start.”

- “When addressing challenging behaviors, you remain calm and consistent. Students know what to expect from you, and this predictability helps create a secure learning environment.”
- “You are skilled at redirecting off-task behavior without drawing negative attention to the student. Your subtle

Constructive Feedback Examples:

- “Sometimes you raise your voice slightly when a student is not listening. Try to maintain an even, quiet tone instead—it often has a better effect and models self-regulation.”
- “I would like you to review the school’s behavior intervention plan for our student with more significant needs. Consistent application of the plan is essential for their progress.”
- “When you give

HOW TO WRITE EFFECTIVE EVALUATION COMMENTS

Having a list of examples is a great starting point, but the best evaluations are personalized and genuine. Here are some practical tips for writing effective comments:

- Be specific and concrete.
Instead of saying “You help

students," say
"You help students by breaking down complex math problems into smaller, more manageable steps."

Specificity makes the feedback
more credible and useful.
